Helping people protect and preserve the historic places that matter to them

Pennsylvania At Risk is a list of Pennsylvania's most endangered historic resources that

- draws statewide attention to the plight of Pennsylvania's historic resources
- promotes action to protect historic properties
- encourages additional state funding for historic places

Properties on the list are given priority in Preservation Pennsylvania's programs and resources.

We count on YOU to help us find these places and tell us how they're threatened. Does one of your special places need some extra attention and help? Please submit it to Pennsylvania At Risk! Click here for more information and the submission form.

DEADLINE: November 6, 2015

The Pennsylvania At Risk list will be announced in January 2016

Meanwhile... we're checking on listed At Risk sites

We've hit the road to re-visit the places you told us were At Risk in previous years and see how they're doing.

There's some good news (two of Sullivan County's beautiful covered bridges were restored after 2011 flooding damage). And there's some bad news (Perry County's Newport train station continues to deteriorate). And there are sites like Philadelphia's Boyd Theater (photo at right) where the news is mixed (the beautiful Art Deco auditorium was demolished; the facade, vestibule and lobby will remain).

Do you have news regarding a past At Risk place? Preservation Pennsylvania always welcomes input and updates on the status of At Risk properties, as well as information about other endangered properties that could use our help. Please contact Field Representative Erin Hammerstedt at 814-571-2444 or via email to talk about At Risk properties in your area. Archived At Risk newsletters are available on our website.

October is Archaeology Month

The theme of this year's Archaeology Month is "Rediscovering Our Industrial Heritage," sponsored by the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission, the Society for Pennsylvania Archaeology, Inc. and the Pennsylvania Archaeological Council.

Archaeological sites are destroyed every day. The goal of Archaeology Month events is to increase awareness of and appreciation for the important historic and prehistoric archaeological sites in the Commonwealth that are part of the heritage of all Pennsylvanians.
