Helping people protect and preserve the historic places that matter to them

Starting off the new year...

We'd like to thank everyone who contributed to the end-of-year Annual Fund drive. This year's campaign raised over $20,000 that will be used to continue our work across the state.

Here's to a great 2015!

Preservation Economics launched a photo contest that invites anyone to submit a photograph of a favorite historic site (up to five entries per person), which has either already benefited the community or has the potential to do so. The subject can be an endangered site, a restored/rehabilitated structure, or an adaptive reuse project.

In addition to your photo entry, include its location, and no more than 150 words about the place you have chosen, such as your ideas for reuse or a short history about the site. You can read more about the contest, including rules and how to submit, on the photo contest page. View entries on social media tagged #presonomics

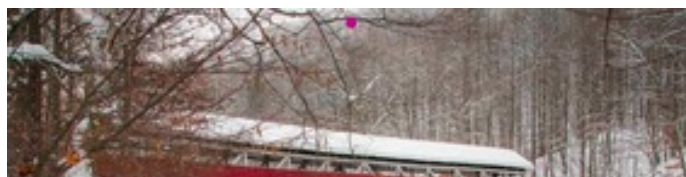

Deadline -- Friday, January 23, 2015.

Preservation Economics studies and promotes the benefits of preserving historic buildings. It's a nonprofit startup that was incorporated in July 2014 for charitable and educational purposes. While it's a virtual company based in Atlanta with no brick-and-mortar office, its current base of operations is Atlanta, Georgia, though its mission is world-wide. Call for nominations: National Trust for Historic Preservation's list of "America's 11 Most Endangered Historic Places"

Since 1988, the National Trust has used its list of America's 11 Most Endangered Historic Places to raise awareness about the threats facing some of the nation's greatest treasures. The list, which has identified 253 sites to date, has been so successful in galvanizing preservation efforts that only a handful of sites have been lost.

National Trust
Partners Network

The "11 Most" list is one of the organization's most powerful tools for raising awareness about beloved yet threatened pieces of our national heritage.

Nominations accepted through March 2, 2015.

Help spread the word by sharing on social media using the hashtag #11Most
